

Domestic violence

The present thesis deals with the phenomenon of domestic violence, from the substantive, procedural and criminological aspects. The first part defines the specifics of domestic violence, its signs and forms. It shows a typology of victims and perpetrators. It analyzes in detail the basic facts of the crimes that are the most commonly perpetrated forms of domestic violence. It also describes the sanctions and some of the treatment programs that are available for perpetrators of domestic violence. It maps the treatment of domestic violence in criminal procedural law and describes the reporting institution. The paper analyzes the status of the victim and also deals with the planned law to protect victims of crime. The conclusion summarizes the treatment of domestic violence abroad and briefly mentions the organizations providing assistance to victims of domestic violence and protection.